Sustainability discussions will reach record numbers of students, teachers, politicians, government agencies, business leaders, and all interested local groups in California.

The Chlorine Free Products Association (CFPA) will be hosting its Sustainability Roundtable event at the 7th Annual UC/CSU/CCC Sustainability Conference on August 3, 2008. This series of discussions brings together regional university faculty and students along with government organizations, business leaders and local professionals to talk about how sustainability practices can improve business processes, cross-educate participants about systems that work, and connect attendees through networking and shared resources. We will reveal sources of reliable information used by campuses in setting standards, parameters and developing partners used in Greening Their Supply Chain.

Roundtable Program

The day begins with a brief presentation from our panelists that highlight their area of expertise as it pertains to sustainability. Attendees are broken in to groups that are moderated by a panel member. Each group will have a different discussion question.

Activity Examples:

What do you consider sustainability and where do you get your information? Why do you trust this information? What certifications/logos are recognizable and what kind of accountability supports that mark? Are colleges and universities letting us down with our children's education? Are the leaders getting them the right message as far as setting the policies?

Our Goal

To have each and every attendee leave the program understanding the definition of what is and isn't green, what 3rd party accountability in greening the supply chain is, and have a "plan of action" moving forward.
